

Hooray for Ms Jackson!!! It's about time we shattered the puritanical hypocrisy in this Country.

I'm a 61-year-old retired, white middle class man. Married 38 years and have 3 grown children.

All my friends that saw the show ALL applauded the courage and beauty of Ms. Jackson. To sit there in the bureaucratic morass of Washington, DC and think that you know what's right for the people of this once great Country to see, hear and think; is so misguided and totally uninformed, not to mention moronic.

I travel all over the World and almost no where else is there such hypocritical behavior as there is here in the USA. We(USA) are a joke to the rest of the World. They laugh at our false moral standards, our breast beating with false morality. In some of the most religious Countries of the World nudity is NOT a big deal. Why do we have to make it such? Because a small minority scream loud enough, in the right ears, to advance their own socio-political ideals on the majority. The silent majority could care less. In fact they loved it!!! It's senseless, a waste of time, money and energy for you to start another investigation based on political motivations. Again...leave it alone.

Let's try to lighten up and let people live their own lives and be responsible to themselves without Big Brother always stepping in to tell us what's right. It only serves to antagonize us even more than you already have.

My position is and ALWAYS has been that if someone doesn't like what they see, switch channels, turn it off, leave the room or here's a novel suggestion....grow up!

I'll end this comment by saying that I've talked to nearly 40 people about this issue before writing this and NOT ONE PERSON FOUND IT OBJECTIONABLE!!! Shocking, yes. Objectionable, NO!!!

So don't drag out the Political horse and expect to ride it to the praise of the masses. "It ain't gonna fly." You'll just be sticking the bear one more time that you need. He's fed up and he's not going to take much more.

Keep the Faith,
Forrester
